

COLOR OF LOBSTERS.

Strictly Speaking They Are Red Before Being Put in Hot Water.

"What makes lobsters and crabs turn red when they are boiled?" said the observant fish man, in reply to a question. "Well, strictly speaking, they don't. The lobster or the crab is just as red before it is put in hot water as it is afterwards, only it is subdued by a mingling of blue in its makeup that gives it a grayish-blue appearance. The blue and red of a live lobster or crab are pigments in the shell. As long as they are there together the red becomes gray. But both of these pigments are not fast colors. The blue won't wash, but the red is there to stay. If it were possible to keep lobsters or crabs alive for any length of time in the sun the blue would fade out as quickly as the same color does out of a cheap flannel suit, and the shell would be as vivid a red as if they had been boiled. It is not an uncommon thing, says the New York Sun, to catch live lobsters and crabs, more frequently the latter, that are entirely red. It has been determined, however, that this eradication of the blue pigment is the result of disease. Live red crabs and lobsters are never put on the market. So the reason a crab or a lobster turns red, as the saying is, when it is boiled, is because the hot water instantly washes the fugitive blue coloring matter out of the shell and leaves only the fast red. It does not take long boiling to change the color. If you were to rescue a lobster from its hot bath two seconds after it is submerged you would find it as red as if it had been boiled for an hour."

THE WORLD OF SCIENCE.

A RECENT invention in lighting combines the principles of the arc and the incandescent.

An Italian engineer has devised a system by which he proposes to utilize the power of trains running down grade.

A SMOKE-CONSUMING locomotive has just been built in Illinois which is said to work admirably.

The wonderful progress made in surgery is shown from the fact that only 9 per cent. of all operations in amputation are fatal.

PAPER properly treated with chemicals and then subjected to great pressure is being used for flooring material and for general use in building as a fire-resisting substance.

A PACKING paper impermeable to water can be made as follows: Take unsized paper and coat it with an aqueous solution of dextrine. When dry apply a layer of sicative oil paint.

IMPRESSIONS of the finger-tips of idiots have been found by Dr. d'Abundo to show very different markings from those of sane people. In a number of idiots the markings on the tips of all the fingers of each hand were identical, and in one idiot the tips of the thumbs had the same markings as those of the fingers. There was a noticeable smoothness of the finger-tips in all the idiots.

THE HUMAN BREATH.

It Will Not Move Mountains, But Has the Power to Raise Books.

The horse-power of the human breath is not great enough to scatter a regiment of soldiers, nor will it uproot trees, as the fable tells us, albeit it contains a surprising amount of leverage, which is evidenced by the loud report which a paper bag filled with the breath will produce when smashed between the hands.

The following experiment demonstrates the elementary power of the human breath still more forcibly.

Take a large bag of good, heavy paper, lay it on the table and cover the closed end of it with several books—a Webster unabridged and a family Bible, for instance—then blow into the bag, filling or inflating it with air, and you will soon see that it will overthrow the books—that is, remove a small mountain.

Strains in Bridges.

An ingenious apparatus for measuring strains in iron or steel bridges has been devised by M. Le Chatelier, a French civil engineer. Two brackets are attached to the member which is to be tested, one bracket carrying a lathe center, while in the other slides a short steel rod pointed at both ends. One of the brackets presses against the flexible diaphragm of a water chamber connected with an open tube in which the water flows when expelled from the chamber.

On the other end, and on the other center on the bracket first mentioned, a bar is supported, the arrangement being such that any extension of the bridge member causes a motion of the diaphragm, and is shown on a highly magnified scale by the fall of the water in the tube. Successful measurements have been made between points only eight inches apart.

The attention of the French Society for the Advancement of Science has recently been directed by certain physicians to the evil effects of an excessive meat diet, or of raw, overcooked meat. The ptomaines thus produced introduce poisonous principles in the system, which the kidneys cannot throw off. Inhabitants of cities indulged too freely in meat, often badly cooked and kept too long; the poor and country population do not often get their meat fresh. Prof. Verneuil considers something should be done to remedy this state of things. He points out that Reclus, the French geographer, has proved that cancer is most frequent among those branches of the human race where carnivorous habits prevail.
